THE CASH INTRIGUE

poor were thrown out of employment and faced starvation, and these are the people who invariably suffer. Then Kelvin, by merely opening his mouth with Breed's consent, stops the panic. What does he do? He issues to the press this morning an announcement that the cash drain has stopped, that Breed no longer requires shipments of actual money for his bread, and that $100,000,000 of currency, a very small percentage of what he has taken in, is to be put back into circulation. What happens next? Immediately confidence will be restored; people will go back 'to work. Don't you see the monstrous thing in this? The very lives of hundreds of thousands of men, women and children have depended upon this man's word! It is monstrous! Some day that system will be swept away, and with it must be swept young Kelvin and all his kind."

"You talk like Kelvin himself used to talk out on the ranch," Rensselaer pemarked. "Keivin has his own dreams of reform. You ought to compare

"I doubt if our dreams would be found to be of the same stuff," returned Blagg griinly. "The only ones benefited by his activity are a very few of his own kind, Breed and himself chiefly. Take the gardener out there. He and his family would have starved had not Keivin personally secured them these places, because he used to board with them when he was poor."

"See the sunshine and hear the little birds twitter," flippantly interrupted Rensselaer. "In the meantime would it not be a pity to sweep out of existence such a tall, well built, good looking, decent sort of chap as Kelwin?"

Phillip and Elsie had by this time left the garden and were now walking slowly toward the house.

"Yes," Blagg admitted, "It would. and it makes it all the harder when you see so beautiful a girl as that looking up at him with that amount of adoration."

Lillian Breed, coming from a cross path just behind Phillip and Elsie and half concealed by shrubbery, stopped instantly as she saw them, clutching her hand upon her breast and half crouching.

"Look at that girl!" said Rensselaer. "In figure she is positively the most beautiful creature I have ever seen. But she is beautiful like a cat, like a tigress."

He glanced at Blagg's face and half recoiled. It flashed upon him instantly that if Lillian were a tigress here was the male of her species. His eyes were blazing, and his lips were parted in almost a snari as he viewed the succeeding tableau. Lillian suddenly advanced upon Kelvin and Elsie, startling them both. They found her smiling. Blagg and Rensselaer could see her give some brief but peremptory directions to Elsie, and the maid, hastily taking a basket from Phillip's hand, hurried into the house. Phillip, outwardly unmoved, saw her go, and outwardly unmoved he walked with Lillian out of view around the wing of the house.

"And the queer thing of it," said Rensselaer a taifle regretfully, "is that he doesn't car' a hang for either of them."

"That's it!" exclaimed Blagg. "That's just what I'm telling you. He cares for no creature in this world but him-

"I don't believe that either," declared Rensselaer.

As Henry Breed, released from Zelphan and breakfast, opened the door of Kelvin's office Lillian started hastily from the back of Phillip's chair, over which she had been leaning. The girl was confused, but the young man was not.

"How nearly do you know?" asked Breed, ignoring the girl altogether. Keivin, his map put away now, bent over a very large sheet of white cardboard, ruled and cross ruled in blue and red, and swept his eye across the diagrammatically arranged figures.

"The situation clears up more the further I go into it," said he. "Out of the panic we have emerged with a considerable profit in cash and with actual possession of 18 per cent of the New York Central and about the same of the Pennsylvania, Southern and Union Pacific, Northern Pacific, Southern railway and New Haven groups. These practically govern all other railroads."

Breed sat down upon the stiff settee which Kelvin had insisted upon having in this room instead of a padded morris chair. His beady eyes glittered above his hawklike nose; his pointed chin was tilted.

"Is it enough?" he asked. "I want absolute control of every mile of railroad in the United States."

"I think you have enough," replied Breed looked at him questioningly, then he turned sharply to his granddaughter. "Lillian, you had better run along and get ready if you are going out upon the links with us." "I want to stay!" she declared. "Grandfather, do you know what you are doing to me? I have all the nervous energy you failed to bequeath to my father. You coop me up here. I must have an interest in something, something big, or I shall go mad! I tell you I shall die if I have no battle to fight except myself and the social inanities which Mrs. Rensselaer is presumed to teach me before I may show myself in Madison avenue!" she declared. "As an ambition that does not seem to promise much scope. I want larger things. They cannot be too large. I, too, would build an empire or destroy one!"

Kelvin looked quietly up at her. She was a picture of striking beauty, but there was about her a certain savagepess, such as a Lucrezia Borgia might
